About The Academy

Currently, there's a noticeable gap in nurturing the potential of emerging African survivor leaders in the fight against human trafficking. This gap is often attributed to the challenges faced by many African survivors, including limited capacity and skills, which hinders their ability to engage effectively and fulfil their leadership potential. Recognising this critical need, The African Survivor Leadership Academy (ASLA) has been established.

ASLA adopts an Afro-centric approach to address this gap in African survivor engagement and representation within the anti-trafficking movement.

This training aims to provide participants with the support, tools, and skills they need to become impactful advocates, leaders, and educators in their communities, while also acknowledging and respecting their unique experiences and journeys.
